Fifth graders embark on their latest and greatest project

If you have not already heard, we are currently working on a State project for Social Studies. Each student has been assigned a state and they have begun researching information in the computer lab. To present our findings, we are going to make a grade-wide tour of the United States through student made websites. Before we do that however, we would like to share the technology specs with you.

To make our websites, Miss Cestnik has created an Education account on Weebly.com. By doing this, no student will need to have an e-mail account, instead she will be able to create usernames and passwords for each student so she is able to closely monitor their work through her account. Because this is set up through a teacher account, we can set everything as private until each student's work has been checked over. At that time, she can then unlock it and will send out a link for your viewing pleasure!

In addition to learning about the United States, we hope this will open up more conversations about using resources, paraphrasing instead of just copy and pasting, as well as online safety (i.e. not using last names).
